English as an Additional Language Policy

At Sir John Nelthorpe School, the number of students for whom English is not their first language, is small. Their needs must be considered by all staff when planning and delivering lessons. Many of the points below relate to general good practice and are not exclusive to dealing with EAL students.

- All lessons must be socially and intellectually inclusive: strategies should be sought, which allow the student to access the curriculum
- Students' mother tongue must be valued, as must their cultural background. We must encourage other students to value diversity
- We must recognise that EAL students may be intellectually very able, but their command of English may mean that they do not understand concepts as quickly as other students. Students must be given time to absorb information and respond to questions
- We recognise that EAL students do not have a language difficulty, ("no" language), they have a different language. Students must be allowed to use their mother tongue to explore concepts
- The experiences of EAL students can provide valuable cultural experiences for other students. We must encourage students to talk about their experiences and language
- Every teacher has the responsibility of helping EAL students develop their language skills. Staff should have high expectations and so students should be asked to develop and extend their answers, rather than giving single – word answers
- We must ensure that EAL students are set appropriate and challenging learning objectives in line with their progress
- We must not allow any racist comments or jokes to pass without sanction - these should be dealt with immediately and the incident noted to a Learning Coordinator
- To ensure that EAL students hear good models of English, wherever possible, they should be grouped with higher-attaining students when oral work is being undertaken
- Use collaborative learning techniques - encourage students to work together in pairs and small groups, to discuss their work and possibly produce a joint piece of work or report for the class; this is a valuable strategy for promoting learning for EAL students
- Select reading materials/resources which contain pictures or other visual aids.

When assessing work, assess the students' competence in the concepts, not in the use of the language. However, encourage students to become competent writers in English, through structured feedback.
